Introduction

Citizens within the G7 group of countries live in managed societies refereed by court actions that often lack facts, law, or merit. Compounding the problem, the general public has a collective memory which lasts little more than six months, and a level of trust not found in other political systems. Government leaders, however, work on goals, and objectives, that can take forty or fifty years to achieve. Furthermore, they enjoy a level of support provided by the British Royal Family and their Free Mason's Society. They provide the Royal Family with its access to rare information—often obtained through secret and nefarious means.

Throughout the last fifty-four years, the G group program has built a global economy upon the idea that everybody experiences a different truth; therefore, there are as many truths in the world as there are people; consequently, there cannot only be one truth; therefore, the truth, the facts, the merits, and the law are not as important as the presentation of a case. Any case will do, especially where money and politics are concerned.

President Donald Trump is the manifestation of the presentation of case theory. He has created a trade war, and he is going to destroy the Global economy. The world is siding with Canadian Prime Minister, Mark Carney. He has been a Governor of the Bank of Canada, and a Governor of the Bank of England. Presently, he presides over the G7 group. He has played an integral part in managing crises the G7 program has navigated since 1972 when George Schultz became the United States Secretary of the Treasury and initiated the program.

President Trump's tariff war is a charade, a Kabuki play. The intention is to hide the collapse of the baby boomer retirement programs from the general public. Both he, and Prime Minister Carney understand that the collapse of retirement programs will cause the economies of The United Kingdom, The French Republic, The Republic of Germany, the United States, and The Imperial Democratic Republic of Japan to also collapse. It will all be blamed on the war against Iran. This paper shines a light on how the G7 group program has been developed and managed throughout the last fifty-four years.

The After-Dinner Conversation

Oh what tangled webs we weave when first we practice to deceive.

British Columbia's Provincial Government awarded its Queen's Counsel appointments for 1982 in the first week of February. James Baker received his nomination on February 14, 1982. He had not expected it because it would not become an appointment for a year. That evening, he and a colleague, Thomas Crabtree (hereinafter referred to as Tom) had an after-dinner-conversation. Other than briefly answering a question I participated by listening.

The consequence of the conversation has haunted me these past forty-four years. Its subject matter more relevant today than it has ever been. Following the conversation, I transcribed it, and swear it remains accurate and true.

James Baker had been the guest of honour at a dinner that evening which ended around quarter past nine. He travelled home with his friend and colleague Thomas Crabtree. On the way, they stopped off at the home of James Baker's former bookkeeper, Ms. Jenny Mitchel where I was a guest. Jenny's boyfriend, Jerry, made up our party of four. Jenny shared her home with my girlfriend. The four of us had spent the evening enjoying a Valentine's Day dinner.

At around ten-fifteen a car drove into the carport. Two men got out and one of them knocked on the door. Jenny opened it, and in walked James Baker and Tom. Jenny poured drinks for the six of us, and as she handing them out, she said, "I hear congratulations are in order." "Ah," said James, "You already know. When did you hear about it"? "This afternoon, around 4:30. Anyway, this is Tony Hewitt, and this is my room mate Angel, his girlfriend. James resembled an early version of Mr. Pickwick in Charles Dickens, 'Pickwick Papers' except instead of a bald head, he had a full head of hair with greyish white, salt and pepper sideburns. Jenny said, "I see you're wearing one of your QC ruffled shirts." "I thought I'd look the part for my celebration. I had to purchase these slacks; otherwise, I wouldn't have been able to go." He was standing with his back to the kitchen cupboards along the north wall, leaning on the edge of the countertop to the right of where Angie stood. On his right stood Jenny's boyfriend, Jerry, and next to him stood Jenny, Tom stood to the right of her, and I stood next to him. I piped up and said, "Wow, what a perfect day for this to have happened." James froze, turned, and glared at me like he had seen a ghost. He asked me, in a somewhat indignant way, "What do you mean"? I answered, "I mean it's Valentine's Day. It's a perfect day for you to have been recognised and honoured, you know—celebrated." "Oh, of course," James responded, chuckling. Jenny then asked when he'd found out. "Well, my office took the call late this afternoon, about four-fifteen, I think. I was in court at the time. The judge was told about the same time. He congratulated me then postponed the hearing. The call probably came from the AG's downtown office, or it may have come from an office of one of the Justices. I do have some friends down there you know. Anyway, I wasn't expecting the nomination because they're usually issued before appointments are made, and this year's appointments were given out last week. If my nomination becomes an appointment, I shall not receive it until next year. I think they want to take a closer look at me. You know, see what more I have to offer them." (His nomination became an appointment in March 1983.)

James Baker turned to Tom saying, "I bet you can't guess what I did to win the case that got me the nomination"? Tom answered saying, "I have no idea, but I bet it was something special knowing you. Jenny turned to Jerry saying, "I'm not going to hear this. It's too much shop talk for me. Come on." Grabbing Jerry's arm, they disappeared down a hallway. Angie turned to me and grabbing my arm, she said, "Come on; let's go," but I wanted to hear what they had to say, so I said, “No thanks; you go ahead if you like. I want to hear this.” Angie left, and I was left standing in the kitchen with James and Tom.

James Baker turned to Tom and said, “I guess this guy will have to do for an audience.” Turning towards me James Baker said, “Step back a bit, wont you? There’s a good chap. I wish to speak to my friend about a legal matter for a minute.” I stepped back and leaned forward. James Baker turned to his left. Placing his left arm around Tom’s right shoulder he pulled Tom towards a countertop. Then, bending over it, James Baker began to make a scribbling motion with his right hand while saying:

“I typed up a Transfer of Ownership Agreement for a client, then taped his father’s signature to the underside of the glass topped table I keep in the office. You know the one in the corner by the stairs. Next, I shone a light from underneath the table to illuminate the signature through the glass. I then taped a copy of the Transfer of Ownership Agreement to the top of the table, so the signature could be seen through the agreement. I walked around the table, so I could see the upside-down signature backwards. A forensic document examiner once told me that if a forger traced backwards over an upside-down signature, the forgery became more difficult to detect. I practiced the technique until satisfied with the result. Over Christmas, I drove to New Westminster and paid one of the registry clerks to stamp and place the agreement inside the courts file. Ha! You should have seen the other side when the clerk found it inside the court file at the beginning of the next hearing. Of course, I put on quite a show. You would have been proud of me. I even protested that I had not been served.”

Tom’s reaction was like that of a scolded cat. In an automatic manner, he bent further at the waist, spun to his right, and pulled away—as if he had been punched in the solar plexus. He straightened up, and with tears in his eyes, he exclaimed, “You can’t do that ! That’s illegal ! That’s fraud ! You can go to jail for that ! What have you done ? Look at the position you have put me in! I'll have to report you !”

James Baker: “No you won’t. Besides, it won’t do you any good. They already know, and besides, it’s not illegal anymore, or it won’t be once the Charter comes on board. It will be up to the other side to catch me. I’ve even heard they might use the case as precedence for the new Charter of Rights and Freedoms once it comes on board. There’s nothing to worry about. I’m going to throw you more work than you’ve ever seen. Everything is going to be different now.”

Tom: “I know, but not like that. That’s fraud”!

James Baker: “No it’s not ! Don’t blame me ! It’s not me ! It’s that idiot (Pierre) Trudeau ! He’s the one whose opened up the whole damn system. I’m telling you. Everything is different now. It’s going to be a wide-open system. In a few short years, everybody will be doing it, right across the country. Weren’t you at the Law Society’s annual meeting last week?”

Tom: “No.”

James Baker: “I was. You should have been there. They had quite a turnout. The place was packed.”

Tom: “I heard something about it, but I was too busy. I used the time to catch up on some paperwork; you know how it is.

James Baker: “Oh well, anyway, they had to delay the keynote address for close to twenty-five minutes whilst extra seating was brought into the auditorium. That new up-and-coming deputy Attorney General, Bryan Bud Smith or it may have been Brian Bud Williams, I’m not sure which one gave the speech. You know the chap though. I hear he likes his marijuana amongst other things; if you know what I mean. Ha! Ha! They say his nickname is Bud. I guess he’s everybody’s bud now. He gave an excellent speech, and although he couched his words in legal jargon, his message was very clear. Common people will no longer be able to hide behind the rights of the individual. From now on, every person's individual civil right will be held inside the courtroom as a collective right. Then we'll be able to manage them. You should have heard him. He even said the AG's office is taking control of the public purse through the courts. He received several standing ovations."

James Baker turned towards me and asked, "So, what do you think of that young man?"

Tony Hewitt: "I suppose it'll be okay, as long as the courts are still able to find the truth.

James Baker laughed and said, "Ah, the truth, don't worry about the truth. We're going to look after the truth." Rubbing his hands together, he did a little skip across the kitchen floor and continued in a gleeful voice. "There's money to be made—lots of it. This Charter thing is the largest money making work program we've ever experienced. It's a huge white elephant. Of course, in return we'll have to look after the government's money. You know, that's the real problem. They're losing too much money, and they're worried. This democratic system is far too expensive. If they can't turn the tap off soon, the whole damn thing is going down the toilet, and they're not going to let that happen. We are the brightest and the best educated. We've read more books than the rest of them, so it only stands to reason that we should be in charge. When the Charter returns, everyone will have collective rights which we will hold inside the court-room. Then we'll see. The poor buggers, they think it's going to be business as usual, but it's not. The morons, they're all bloody morons. You know what they're like. They're like cattle in a pen. If we use the right prod, we can get them to go anywhere. Following last week's meeting, a few of us were asked to volunteer for a special program that's being put together over at the AG's office. It's all very hush-hush. We're going to assist them in the development of strategies that will help them manage special cases inside the Supreme Court. I've already been asked to join, and I've said yes. Would you like to join us? I could put in a good word for you."

Tom: "I don't know. I'll have to think about it. How would a special case work?"

James Baker: "Well it hasn't been put together yet, so I'm not certain, but the rules of engagement will probably run something like this. A QC will be given a file and allowed to pick a team. Then he'll be allowed to do whatever he likes to get the file through the courts as long as he doesn't get caught. Mind you, if he does get caught doing something wrong, the office will have to disown him, and he'll be punished and publicly disgraced. Then, whatever he's been caught doing wrong will never be allowed to be used against the public again. Of course, there's not much chance of that ever happening. By the time we get the program up and running, we'll have our own people staged throughout the system. If you want to join us, you'd better hurry. Our first meeting will be held in Victoria next month or in the first week of April at the latest. They've got to hurry. The Charter's arriving back from England in twelve, or sixteen weeks. I'm not really, sure. Then we'll have to begin in earnest. You should see the changes they're considering. They've been exploring it for months. Nothing's off the table. We're going to start in the corporation and see what works there. Then, whatever works there will be carried over into some of the other portfolios. They're really concerned about big-ticket items like the Ministries of Health, Education, and Social Services. It's all costing too much, and nobody can prove that any of it works, or that there's any real payback. Take the Ministry of Education, that's really got to change. There's far too much waste within the system. Besides, some of us believe that an uneducated populace will be easier to manage than an educated one. The immigration doors are being thrown wide open to increase the tax base. Some believe the family has become too powerful at the ballot box, so we're going to create some new ideas for them as well. You know, divide, and conquer and all that. Of course, what we'd really like to do is have one of our own elected to a seat in government. Then we'd really be able to manage the system, but that's more of a long-term project, fifteen to twenty years I'd imagine. (Twenty-two years later Mr. Justice Wally Opel resigned his seat in the Supreme Court and became the Attorney General of British Columbia.) James continued: We understand there will be some chaos, but we'll have the resources to manage it, so it won't matter. I've even heard think-tanks have been asked to look at some of the really big questions."

Tom: "Like what».

James Baker: "Well, it's been decided to transfer the wealth of the west to the east around the turn of the century. They don't know how they're going to accomplish it, or to whom it will go, although both China and India are looking pretty good right now. Anyway, they've been discussing it over at the AG's office."

Tom: "But, who's decided, and why?"

James Baker: "Oh, you know, the usual suspects, the Royals and others like them. Mind you, I don't know if that includes the Royals of Europe or just the British Royals; they're always involved. Too many of us will be retiring soon, and the government has already spent a lot of retirement funds on social programs they could ill afford. I mean let's face it; too many of us have been at the trough of plenty for far too long. It's too bad really. They've known for years, this day was coming, and now it's time to pay the piper. They've been discussing it over in the White House library for years but haven't been able to find a solution. The G group has gotten hold of the problem now, and they think they may have a solution. They are really concerned. If they can't find a way out of this mess soon, they're going to run out of money, and the whole damn thing will go down the toilet. We've no other choice. We can't tell the public because we'd end up with a rebellion on our hands. The Royals and others like them have agreed. We have had the money this century, so it should be somebody else's turn next century. That's not all. They're really concerned about world population growth."

Tom: "What do you mean ?

James Baker: "They believe, by the year two thousand and fifty, the world's population will have climbed to around nine billion, and they don't think the planet will have the resources to sustain that number of souls. They're wondering if they'll be able to find a different way of managing the problem, or if they'll have to use the same old method. Think-tanks have been brain-storming the idea of another war. Their latest estimates suggest up to two-thirds of the planet's population would be lost in the next war. Mind you, they'd be able to begin again. We're going to go all the way. Why, even as we speak, we have one of our own flying south to talk to the other side."

Tom raised an eyebrow in a somewhat quizzical expression and asked, "What! You mean the criminal element?"

James Baker: "Yes. Exactly. Our man, well I say our man, but he is not actually one of us. He's an attorney who is well known for playing both sides of the fence, so to speak. It's all very unofficial of course, and nothing's in writing. Anyway, he has instructions to enter into some high-level negotiations with some of the more respectable crime families down there. The government wants to know if there are any areas of commonality where government and organised crime might work together for the benefit of the common good. The government wants to create a more balanced society. Some believe it's been too one sided for far too long. Anyway, as it stands, the criminal element is too chaotic. Some in government believe we could manage it better than it's being managed now. Mind you, I'm not sure how they'd accomplish that. Perhaps, they could run a shadow government. You know, democracy during the day, and the criminal part at night. I mean they have that huge building in Victoria. Its empty all night. Nobody ever goes there; Christ, nobody would even know. Apparently, the criminals in South America have been getting too much heat from the Americans, so they're looking for a safe haven for their distribution networks. I mean let's face it; crime has always been with us. It's never been defeated, and it never will be. Besides this whole democracy thing has never really worked properly either. What harm could we do? We are the brightest and the best educated, so it only stands to reason that we should be in charge. Besides, it's about time we started giving the people what they really want. We're serious. I'm telling you. If we don't do something soon, we're going to run out of money, and they're not going to let that happen."

Tom: But where will they get the ideas to put it all together.

James Baker: I don't know. We'll probably have to ask our friends in the Masons; they usually have some good ideas.

Tom took a step forward; using his right hand, he grabbed James Baker's right sleeve and nodded towards me. James Baker looked at me and snickered.

James Baker: "What are you talking about? Hell, he's drunk; come morning, he won't even remember what we were talking about. Besides, you know how the office looks after things like that. Russia's not the only place where you can get a knock on the door in the middle of the night. You wait and see, with incremental steps over the next five years, or so, we are going to plant people who think like us throughout the system. Just think how much money we'll be able to save. Can you imagine the kind of games we'll be able to play with our trust accounts? You know what we can do with them already, don't you?" As he spoke, James Baker tapped his right nostril with his fore-finger; sniffed hard and said, "If you know what I mean." A short time later, the conversation ended, and they disappeared into the night.

Today, forty-four years later, much of the world's wealth has been transferred from the middle class to the one percent and their new markets overseas. The G7 group are presenting their case, and when they have finished doing that, they are going to have another world war to manage the world's over-population problem. When they have accomplished that, they will begin their monopoly game again; however, the next time, common people will be living in a free and open society without services or protections.'

The History behind Today's Political Issues

The Norway Document

I arrived in Norway on August 1, 2013. A short time later, I asked professor Trond Storbakken (phonetic) at the Norwegian University of Life Sciences to read a document describing the coming collapse of the 'Golden Age of Capitalism'. A few days later he introduced me to two men who claimed to be from Eastern Europe. They asked if I could speak to them about the document. I agreed to speak with them but asked they read it first. They said they would and left, never to return. Unbeknownst to me, the professor Storbakken travelled to China twice a year. I believe my document was researched and supported by someone in both the Russian and the Chinese governments. In March 2014, Russia annexed Crimea.

Towards a Future War

British Columbia's Attorney General in 1981 created a cabal and asked them to brainstorm for changes that would alter the relationship between government and people in the marketplace. Federal and provincial governments intended for the changes to take place as soon as Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau signed the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. According to James Baker, similar brain-storming sessions were held across Canada, and throughout The United Kingdom, the United States, France, Germany, Italy, and Japan. One question, the attorneys were asked to brainstorm concerned casualty numbers in a future war. Estimates rose as high as two-thirds of the planet's population. James Duncan Baker said that the loss of so many would be all right as their loss would enable the Golden Age of Capitalism to begin again. To understand the significance of this historical tragedy, we begin at the end of the Second World War.

Baby Boomers and the White House Library Group

Following the second World War, armed forces from The United Kingdom, the United States, Canada, France, Germany, and Japan became the civilian workforce for the new consumer driven free-market economy. They called it, 'The Golden Age of Capitalism.' Today, that workforce is at the end of its service life; baby boomers are retiring. According to the Pew Research Foundation: In the United States as the year 2011 began on Jan. 1, the oldest members of the Baby Boom generation celebrated their 65th birthdays. In fact, on that day, today, and every day for the next 19 years (now 4 years) 10,000 baby boomers will reach age 65."¹ That is approximately 51.100.000 people to date. Since January 1, 2011, approximately 7.000.000 baby boomers have died in the United States; which leaves approximately 43.000.000 retirees who on the one hand, no longer pay taxes from a regular pay cheque, or participate in the consumer driven marketplace to the same degree as they did when working. On the other hand, they are entitled to a pension cheque and health care benefits.

According to work-force projections and forecasts for dependent population percentages in the United States,

"The nation's elderly population--people ages 65 and older--will grow to 81 million in 2050, up from 37 million in 2005. ... The dependency ratio--the number of working age, compared with the young and elderly--will rise sharply, mainly because of growth in the elderly population. There were 59 children and elderly people per 100 adults of working age in 2005. That ratio will rise to 72 dependents per one hundred adults of working age in 2050."²... "The working-age population, now 63% of the total, will decline to 58%."⁴

⁴ Pew Research Centre, Social and Demographic Trends US Population Projections 2005-2050 P. 24.

According to the British Government's Office of National Statistics, "There were 65.6 million people in The United Kingdom in 2016."³ Eighteen percent were 65 years or older, and a further 2.4 percent were over the age of 85.⁴ Another 16 percent were fourteen years or younger.⁵

That is 36.4 percent of the population who will be dependent on the British government for Education, health care, and other services while not paying taxes from a regular pay cheque. That leaves 63.6 percent of the British population supplying the tax base to support the growing need. The need will continue to grow because baby boomers in The United Kingdom, the United States, France, Germany, and Japan will continue to retire until two thousand and twenty-nine. Escalating baby boomer retirement numbers is the reason why French President Macron was so desperate to alter the structure of France's retirement programs by increasing the retirement age to sixty-four without a vote in parliament. Japan's economy faces the greatest challenge. According to BBC News: The government report says that by 2060, Japan will have 87 million people, down from today's 128 million. The proportion aged 65 or older is expected to double to 40%. ... The research says that Japan's population will keep declining by one million people every year in coming decades.⁶ Due to demographics and cultural beliefs regarding integration, Japan has little hope of resolving the decline of their economy over time. The question is whether other economies will survive when Japan's falters. It is why the G7 group of countries have transferred their wealth to new markets overseas and created the global economy.

According to the United States Office of the Historian in the article titled Biographies of the Secretaries of State: George Pratt Schultz (1920–2021). In the chapter titled, 'Rise to Prominence, the article states: "His first experience in government came in 1969 when

President Richard Nixon appointed him Secretary of Labor (1969–70), then Director of the Office of Management and Budget (1970–72), and then Secretary of the Treasury (1972–1974).⁷

George Pratt Schultz became one of the architects of the G group program. He was also involved in planning an agenda to hide the collapse of the Golden Age of Capitalism. According to the Margaret Thatcher Cambridge Foundation Archive:

“In April 1973, finance ministers of the United States, Britain, France, and Germany quietly met for a discussion in the White House Library, and so began a series of very informal and private sessions usually held without papers or retinues of officials. With deliberate blandness and opacity its members dubbed this institution the ‘Library Group.’⁸ The following year, they invited an official from Japan to join the meeting.

“They became known as the group of five finance ministers. They met annually for fourteen years. The last meeting was in Paris in 1987.⁹ During the 1982 Valentine’s day ‘After Dinner Conversation,’ James Baker said that following several meetings, finance ministers concurred in three areas:

- If they could not resolve pension program insolvency problems, pension programs would be bankrupt sometime within the first fifty-years of the twenty-first century.¹⁰
- The retirement program bankruptcies would cause each of their economies to fail within the same fifty-year period.¹³

- Based on every mathematical model available, it would be impossible to predict a different outcome.¹¹

Furthermore, James Baker said finance minister notified their government leaders who decided not to inform the public because of possible consequences including an outright rebellion and a resurgence of the guillotine. Instead the G4 program was handed the task of resolving the future baby boomer retirement program insolvency problem.

Changing Government Leaders to Create the G5 Group

Nineteen-seventy-four saw a change in leadership for each of the five governments that became the G5 group:

- “In February, the United Kingdom’s population elected a hung Parliament. Queen Elizabeth mediated an agreement between Ted Heath and Harold Wilson to establish Parliament. It lasted eight months. In October, another election was held which saw Harold Wilson’s Labour Party win with a three-seat majority.”¹²
- On April 2, the French Republic’s President Pompidou died.¹³ On May 27, 1974, Valery Giscard d’Estaing succeeded him as President of France“
- In May, Willy Brandt, Chancellor of Germany, resigned over a spying scandal involving one of his close associates who was accused of being a spy for the East German Stasi.”¹⁴
On May 16, 1974, Helmut Schmidt succeeded him as Chancellor of Germany.

- In August, the United States President, Richard Nixon resigned over the Hotel Watergate break-in.”¹⁵ President Gerald Ford succeeded — then pardoned him.
- “In December, Japanese Prime Minister, Tanaka, resigned over scandalous business transactions.”¹⁶ Prime Minister, Takeo Miki succeeded him.

The world is familiar with President Richard Nixon and Watergate; however, the other G5 countries changing leadership within the same year smacks of collusion, and suggests the following questions. Did former President, Richard Nixon, fall upon his Watergate sword to focus attention away from the other G5 leaders as they established their program ? How many of the new leaders held membership in the British Royal Family’s secretive Free Mason’s society or the United States’ secretive Skull and Bones society ?

In his New York Times article written on May 8, 1977, ‘A Secret Society of Finance Ministers’ Clyde H. Farnsworth referred to the G5 as. “an international Skull and Bones that meets in French chateau, English country houses or on Presidential yachts on the Potomac. Without G5 finance ministers, there would have been no economic summit in London. Nor would there have been two other summits at Rambouillet and Puerto Rico.”¹⁷

Rambouillet and Secret Discussions

According to the Margaret Thatcher Cambridge Foundation Archive, in 1975 President Valery Giscard d’Estaing of France, invited Prime Minister Harold Wilson of The United Kingdom, President Gerald Ford, of the United States, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of Germany, and Prime Minister Takeo Miki of Japan, to meet at the Chateau de Rambouillet outside Paris. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt’s opening remarks at Rambouillet were recorded by a notetaker. On page 2, at the end of line 9, he writes: “he (Schmidt) was not convinced that we had seen the worst of the recession. He felt this not so much on economic grounds, as because the recession itself had been due partly to political errors and mistakes, and politicians were capable of making further mistakes.”¹⁸ The Margaret Thatcher Archive further states, that there was a clamouring of insistence on the part of the participants to allow Italy to join the group at Rambouillet. Each participant interviewed the Italian Prime Minister separately and in secret. Four issues caused the interviews to be held separately and in secret.

- In 1972, George Schultz and William B. Simon discovered future insolvency problems with baby boomer retirement programs. In 1973 they co-hosted the first meeting of G4 finance ministers.
- The eight-year closure of the Suez Canal from June 5, 1967–June 5, 1975, caused a stubborn recession for the G5 group of governments which worsened the impact of retirement program insolvency problems.
- The prolonged recession and worsening baby boomer crisis became justification for calling a series of meetings including the one held at Rambouillet.
- Baby boomer retirement programs and the G5 group of economies were going to collapse by the year 2050.

The G7 group’s failure to inform the general public of the expected financial collapse was an initial step in replacing the democratic system based on serving and protecting people in the marketplace with a system designed to manage the marketplace. The aforementioned four issues presented the G group with a need to hide the collapse of their financial systems. They decided to increase the size of the marketplace to increase the size of their economies, and to that end, they created the Global economy.

That same year, the G5 group began its quest to create a more balanced society. According to James Baker, they began searching for areas of commonality where government and organised crime could work together for the benefit of the common good. According to James Baker, the G5 believed the criminal element would one day create as much as fifty percent of the world economy.

The G5 group held its fourth meeting at Rambouillet in secret. Over the last forty-eight years, there have been hundreds of secret meetings. They have allowed the G group to hide the collapse of the 'Golden Age of Capitalism' from the people they were sworn to protect.

Italy joined the G5 group at the Rambouillet Summit and the group became known as the G6 group.¹⁹ In 1976 Canada joined the G6. "President Gerald Ford of the United States invited Canada into the G7. ...Just as France had invited Italy in 1975, he invited Canada to the 1976 summit in Puerto Rico."²⁰

Carlton Group Sherpas

George Schultz and William B. Simon became Carlton Group 'Sherpas.' They carried information and advice between members of the G group, both during and between meetings. The Margaret Thatcher Cambridge archive concerning the Rambouillet meetings of November 15–17, 1975, records:

Some familiar features of later summits were there from the first, however, such as the careful advance preparation of summit conclusions by emissaries close to heads of government, not all of them officials (later called the "sherpas," here known as the Carlton Group from the name of the New York hotel at which they first met). Their role was to ensure that something of substance would be seen to emerge from the summit, because a meeting at head of government level could not take place without concrete results to show, on pain of collective loss of face.

A clear indication that sherpas had far more influence over the summits than that of messenger boys. They were the architects of how to hide the collapse of the Golden Age of Capitalism.

The United States Social Security Administration wrote in the 1972–1977 Amendments titled: Historical Background and Development of Social Security'.

“It became apparent that social security faced a funding shortfall, both in the short-term and in the long-term. The short-term problem caused by the bad economy, and the long-term problem by the demographics associated with the baby boom. By their 1975 report the trustees said the Trust Funds would be exhausted by 1979.”²¹

The June 23-29, 1995, edition of The European reported that a German participant said:

“We agreed there was a need for someone to be in control on an international scale.

We hardly knew each other prior to the meeting. But mutual appreciation and sympathy developed as we talked, laying the ground for successful cooperation.” Hence the idea of a group of world leaders meeting to ‘monitor’ the world’s currencies was born.”²² insolvency problems to save the 'Golden Age of Capitalism.' They failed, and according to James Baker, in 1981 they decided to find a way to bury the insolvency problem so that no person would ever discover their deceptive behaviour.

The Royal Influence

During the February 14, 1982 'After Dinner Conversation', James Baker said that the British Royal Family heard of the G7 group's concerns and in 1981, probably at the G7's Montebello meeting in Quebec, a Royal representative told the G7 group of Presidents, Prime Ministers, a Chancellor, and their finance ministers:

- Your governments will have to take control of their populations.
- They will have to transfer the wealth of their nations to new markets overseas.
- They will have to manage down what is left of their economies (austerity programs).
- They will have to start them up again (quantitative easing program).

According to James Baker, the G7 group of leaders explained to the Royal representative that they could not agree to the proposal as their governments were either Democratic Republics, or Parliamentary Democracies. Their citizens had a right to control personal services and protections in the marketplace. James Baker, further said that the Royal representative informed the G7 that if they did not do as the Royal Family suggested, the financial system would collapse into chaos.²³ The G7 group of Presidents, Prime Ministers, and a Chancellor, along with their finance ministers began replacing the democratic system with a global managed marketplace on behalf of the educated elite—the one percent.

The Royal representative might well have been the Queen's cousin, the Duke of Kent. He has been the Grand Master of The Free Masons Society, United Grand Lodge for more than fifty years. If not the Duke of Kent, then his brother Prince Michael, Grand Master of Mark Master

²³ Tony Hewitt: The After Dinner Conversation February 14, 1982.

Masons and Grand Master of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Middlesex could well have managed the Royal influence. Both are first cousins to her late Royal Highness, Queen Elizabeth II. Their relationship to The Royal family, establishes the Free Masons as a worldwide extension of The Royal Family.

Charter Documents

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, had been working on the idea of creating a free and just society since his 1968 political campaign. Undoubtedly, he suggested to the other members of the G7 that if they placed the citizenry's individual civil right to control personal services and protections inside the judicial system as a collective civil right, then governments would have more control over the public purse, the marketplace, and the obligation of how and when to supply services and protections. Then everybody forgot: "Government cannot grant freedom to people because freedom belongs to the people by birth right. Government exists not to give the people liberty, but to protect their liberty."²⁴

Responding to their fear of a financial collapse, the G7 group of governments took control of their populations by creating The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and The European Charter of Fundamental Rights. The European document was signed at the turn of the century following the G7 group's eighteen-year study of the Canadian population's response to, and acceptance of, the Charter document. Both documents neutralised the power of the democratic vote because the system no longer enjoyed a balance of power. The democratic system became unbalanced to the government's advantage.

Once the Charter document was in place, and to protect funds that the legal profession now recognised as the government's public purse, Queens Counsel attached to British Columbia's ²⁴ Mark Steyn. Piddingworth. http://www.piddingworth.com/trudeau_charter.html. [Online] [Cited: April 23, 2015.] http://www.piddingworth.com/trudeau_charter.html.

Presentation of Case Management Program began managing the population outside of a courtroom according to levels of education, degrees of wealth and income tax history. Based on results, members of the legal profession began to disregard the Rule of Court, fabricate facts, and alter sworn testimony during multi-million-dollar civil court actions. James Baker QC. accomplished much of his success by enlisting the assistance of Free Masonry and organised crime.

When members of the legal profession deny citizens of the right to an equal opportunity to a fair and proper trial, it has nothing to do with justice or democracy, nor has it anything to do with contract law pertaining to insurance. It has everything to do with transferring wealth by withholding from someone that which should belong to them. Governments no longer have the legal obligation to protect people in the marketplace, and courts are the management tool of government. Judicial systems are no longer independent; citizens have become consumers of the services they used to obtain for taxes. Governments have transferred services to the free enterprise marketplace. Governments, politicians, and the special interest power brokers who manage them have destroyed the democratic system by destroying the power of the middle class. The G7 group and their Charter documents give citizens the illusion of protection while denying some of an equal opportunity to a fair and proper trial. Nowhere is this more evident, than in all branches of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. Governments are returning the citizenry back to the dark days of 1215 when King John's Barons forced him to sign the Magna Carter.

The United Kingdom's Transfer of Wealth Program

The British Government transferred wealth through the 1972 European Communities Act. The act in section two, subsection three states:

“There shall be charged on and issued out of the Consolidated Fund or, if so determined by the Treasury, the National Loans Fund the amounts required to meet any Community obligation to make payments to any of the Communities or member States, or any Community obligation in respect of contributions to the capital or reserves of the European Investment Bank or in respect of loans to the Bank, or to redeem any notes or obligations issued or created in respect of any such Community obligation; and, except as otherwise provided by or under any enactment.

(a) any other expenses incurred under or by virtue of the Treaties or this Act by any Minister of the Crown or government department may be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament; and

(b) any sums received under or by virtue of the Treaties or this Act by any Minister of the Crown or government department, save for such sums as may be required for disbursements permitted by any other enactment, shall be paid into the Consolidated Fund or, if so, determined by the Treasury, the National Loans Fund.²⁵

The European Communities Act channelled the United Kingdom's wealth through the Bank of England to the European Investment Bank. They dispersed funds to countries within the European Common Market and the BRICS group of countries. Transfer of wealth programs contributed to the dramatic rise in middle income consumption in Africa and Asia. Transfer of wealth programs impacted the economies of The United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Canada, and the United States in a similar fashion. For them, transfer of wealth programs accomplished, austerity, quantitative easing, along with homelessness, food banks, and rough sleeping.

Canada's Transfer of Wealth Program

In nineteen-seventy-four, Canada's Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau altered his government's practice of borrowing from the Bank of Canada at little or no interest rate. Instead, Canada's Federal Government began borrowing from private banks at compound interest rates. The Federal government continued borrowing from the Bank of Canada but on a depreciating scale over time. Under advice from the Basel Group, a think-tank of Bankers associated with the G10 who at the time had no legal standing, the Canadian Government began paying compound interest rates on an appreciating scale.

Prudent Press, an open concept rooted in addressing the relative strengths and weaknesses in Canada in a variety of sectors says, Pierre Trudeau's government promoted the idea of stagflation. Nineteen years later, in 1993, finance minister, Paul Martin supported the idea of borrowing from private banks to combat inflationary pressures (It bares mentioning, inflationary pressures were caused more by the extended closure of the Suez Canal. It caused Canadians to spend more on energy costs which contributed to inflationary pressures far more than by borrowing at little or no interest rates from the bank of Canada). Further, Canada transferred funds through Gun Control, Gun Registration, and Federal Human Resources programs. Today, Canada has an overall debt of more than 1.1 trillion dollars. Canadian taxpayers are paying thirty billion dollars per year. According to Prudent Press, eighty-five percent of the debt is directly tied to compound interest rates. Every man, woman, and child owe more than $16 thousand dollars.²⁶ It is their investment in the Global Marketplace, and it has contributed to the explosion of middle-income growth in Africa, and Asia.

The United States Transfer of Wealth Programs

In the same methodical fashion, the United States created the Saving and Loans, S&L, crisis which weakened the economy while transferring wealth. The United States has a Constitution and a Bill of Rights. There are three branches of government in the United States, the Executive, the Legislative, and the Judicial. The Executive Branch, including President Reagan, pretended to ²⁶ Prudent Press. The History of the Bank of Canada. Bank of Canada 1974.

<http://prudentpress.com/finance/history-bank-of-canada/>

see no evil. The Legislative Branch in the form of Congress and the Senate spoke no evil (except from behind closed doors) and the Judicial Branch heard no evil. On page one of the research novel Big Money Crime, Kitty Calavita, Henry N. Pontell, and Robert H. Tillman state: “We argue instead that deliberate insider fraud was at the very center of the disaster. Furthermore, we contend that systematic political collusion—not just policy error—was a critical ingredient in this unprecedented series of frauds.”²⁷

In the United States, President Carter, President Reagan, Vice President, then President, George Herbert Walker Bush, and President Clinton signed acts to remove regulations from the banking industry and savings, and loans, thrift industry. They created the environment in which the Savings and Loans crisis thrived. The United States Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches along with their lobbyist groups have decimated the American economy. To date, the missing savings and loans funds have never been recovered. The estimated $1.5 trillion dollar cost to the American taxpayer has simply—vanished. The United States Government also transferred wealth overseas by issuing higher tax rates to national companies; thereby encouraging them to move to new markets overseas. There, they participated in creating the Global Marketplace where they paid less in labour costs, and taxes, thereby increasing profits. The United States government, penalised any company that attempted to return profits to the United States with higher tax rates.

Transfer of wealth programs decimated the textile and clothing industries as millions of jobs transferred to new markets overseas. To illustrate, imagine, an employee earns a wage which the family spends in their community. Suddenly, the person becomes unemployed. The family, and the community lose the financial benefit of the pay cheque. Now multiply that scenario by millions of job losses, and you begin to understand the impact on people and the economy as transfers of wealth took place. Tax cuts created by Ronald Reagan, George Bush, and Donald Trump contributed greatly to raising the debt ceiling from around 1 trillion dollars in 1981 to 38 trillion dollars today. Tax cuts were based on the trickle-down theory. It suggests that if you give money to the wealthy, they will invest it in the marketplace to create more wealth. The reality is most of the tax cuts transferred to new markets overseas.

The Iraq War

As transfers of wealth were taking place, the G7 group supported a program to sabotage the United States economy from within. The United States' second war in Iraq was run on a credit card. The 43rd President George Walker Bush, Vice President Dick Cheney, Secretary of State Donald Rumsfeld, CIA Director George Tenet, special advisor to the President, Karl Rove, The United Kingdom's Prime Minister Tony Blair, and others connived, colluded, and created the following false information to justify their going to war:

- The government of Iraq purchased weapons-grade yellow-cake-uranium from Niger, Africa.²⁸
- Chemical weapons-grade rocket cylinders were photographed in Iraq.²⁹
- The government of Iraq had a nuclear weapons program.³⁰
- The government of Iraq had allowed Al-Qaida to train in Iraq.

Demonstrating collusion and connivance, other members of the G7 went along with the false information. Once the campaign of 'Shock and Awe' had subsided, President George Walker

Bush instructed the Leader of the Coalition's Provisional Authority, Paul Bremer, to disband the Iraqi army and dismiss the Ba'ath political party which caused a power vacuum between the Sunni and Shia populations. Others have called those decisions, two of the greatest mistakes of the war. Neither decision was a mistake. President George Walker Bush and his entourage intended to create chaos and mistrust between Sunni and Shi'a communities. In Iraq "the demise of his (Saddam Hussein's) iron fisted dictatorship blew the lid off suppressed sectarian conflict and opened the door to regional extremists."³¹

The political and military leadership of the United States understood the relationship between the Sunni and Shi'a communities. They knew there would be a consequence for exploiting the suppressed sectarian conflict between Sunni and Shia populations. The American political and military campaign opened a conflict that raged throughout the Middle East. President George Walker Bush, Vice President Dick Cheney, Secretary of State Donald Rumsfeld, CIA Director George Tenet, special advisor to the President Karl Rove and The United Kingdom's Prime Minister, Tony Blair are responsible for beginning the war. They wanted to establish a regional conflict in the Middle East. The second war in Iraq had three objectives:

- Damage the United States economy, which it did.
- Create a regional conflict between the Sunni, and Shi'a populations in the Middle East, which it did.
- Create an illegal migration towards Europe, which it did.

Did the leaders of the G7 understand that Islam intended to take over the Christian populations of Europe, England, and the United States ? Did they sign on to a GENOCIDE like that in Gaza?

³¹ J. Arraf. Sunni and Shia Divided in Iraq, the Land of Cain and Abel. globalPost - International News. [Online] March 18, 2013. [Cited: March 11, 2015.] <http://www.globalpost-com/dispatch/news/regions/middle-east/iraq/130315/cain-abel-iraq-sunni-shia-rift>.

Members of the disbanded Iraqi army officer corps joined the ranks of ISIS. The ISIS campaign with its Caliphate and suicide-bombers was as revengeful as it was diabolical. George Walker Bush and his cohorts should be in jail for their crimes against humanity. An investigation into Tony Blair's conduct (regarding Britain's decision to enter the Iraq War alongside the United States) declared that Tony Blair had not lied. He broke Parliamentary procedure by having secret discussions about the decision to go to war, but he did not lie.

According to Linda Bilmes, a lecturer in public finance at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, the people of Iraq and the people of the United States have continued to suffer the consequences of the Bush doctrine.

"I think that if you go back to 2001, when the President took office, you can remember there was a surplus, a budget surplus of about $150 billion and the congressional budget office at the time was projecting that that surplus would continue over the next several years. And since then, things have unravelled in every possible dimension that you can measure and certainly across every metric that economists measure. The budget debt has disappeared. Our national debt has gone from about $5.5 trillion to between $10 and $15 trillion, depending on how much of the bailout you count. Inflation is higher. Unemployment is higher. Four million manufacturing jobs have been lost. Five million people have lost their health insurance. And the more you look into it, the more you see the very severe economic consequences that have been the result of errors and poor judgment during the past eight years."³²

Economic consequences are also the result of the original G5's commitment:

- To hide the baby boomer pension program crisis, and the G7's commitment:

³² Linda Bilmes The 10 trillion Dollar Hangover: Paying the Price for Eight Years of Bush. A Daily Independent Global News Hour with Amy Goodman & Juan González. [Online] December 22, 2008 [Cited: March 11, 2015.] http://www.democracynow.org//2008/12/22/linda_bilmes_the_10_trillion_hangover.

- To transfer the individual civil right to control services and protections on demand from the marketplace to the judicial system as a collective right:
- To Transfer the wealth of their nations to new markets overseas:
- To manage down their market economies by creating austerity programs:
- To restart their economies by creating Quantitative Easing programs:
- To replace the democratic system's service agenda with a management agenda so governments had more control over their economies:

Charter documents absolved governments of their responsibility to serve and protect their populations in the marketplace; consequently, they are responsible for the illegal migration crisis sweeping through Europe. Had the focus of government been on serving and protecting the citizenry when the illegal migration crisis began, it would not have become a chaotic humanitarian crisis that it has, and it is going to get worse. The religion of Islam, including ISIS, has used the migration crisis as a Trojan-horse since its beginning. Estimates from British Intelligence, MI6, suggest a figure of five thousand ISIS members in Europe. Furthermore, the religious doctrine of Islam does not encourage assimilation within Christian communities; the religion of Islam promotes domination. Consequently the leadership of the G7 has placed the religion of Christianity in peril.

Germany's population in 2009 was eighty-two point two million. It will decrease by eleven point one million to seventy-one point one million by two thousand and fifty.³³ Other European countries have not projected similar decreases. France's population will increase from sixty-two point three million to sixty-eight million.³⁸ The United Kingdom's population will increase from sixty-one point six million to seventy-two million.³⁴ Neither France, nor England, have similar requirements to grow their workforces. Competition in a future marketplace dictates that Germany create a larger workforce—enter the migrants.

³³ The Economist. Pocket World in Figures. London: Profile Books Ltd, 2012.

³⁸ The Economist Pocket World in Figures

The legacy of wars fought by the Bush family, Bashar-al-Assad, and Vladimir Putin has forced people to risk their lives on open waters, and to be driven like cattle for hundreds of miles towards Europe in search of a better life, yet what awaits them is the prospect of hell on earth as Vladimir Putin, and the G7 inch toward the next culling of the world's population.

The G7 group want to regain control of their economies. By culling their populations, the G7 group of governments will regain control of their markets and replace their democratic, and parliamentary democracies with Russian style oligarchy governments—a style of government that favours the one percent.

Russia Joins the G7 Group

The G7 group's need to expand their financial markets to better manage the collapse of the `Golden Age of Capitalism` prompted them to allow Russia to join the G7 program. According to Brittanica:

“Group of Eight, formerly and subsequently Group of 7 (G7), intergovernmental organization that originated in 1975 through informal summit meetings of the leaders of the world's leading industrial countries (the United States, the United Kingdom, France, West Germany, Italy, Canada, and Japan). Canada did not attend the initial meeting in 1975, and the European Commission joined the discussions in 1977. Beginning in 1994, Russia joined the discussions, and the group became known as the Group of 8 (G8) or the “Political Eight”; Russia officially became the eighth member in 1997. ... With no formal charter, a limited bureaucratic structure, and no permanent secretariat, leaders of the G7 discuss major economic issues in an informal setting. The agenda has changed depending on international circumstances—e.g., the oil crisis in the 1970s, global environmental issues in the 1980s, economic transition in the formerly communist countries and debt and financial instability in the 1990s, and the special problems facing Africa in the early 21st century. Historically, when noneconomic issues such as terrorism, drug trafficking, human rights, regional security, and arms control dominated the discussions, the G8 was convened.³⁵

Why Russia Invaded Ukraine

On the one hand, “The Russian Government determined what was produced, how it was produced, and how it was distributed.”³⁶ On the other hand, the G7 group of countries functioned as free market economies. The law of supply and demand dictated their function. Because they had little in common, there was never a reason to speak about their different economies or financial stability; consequently, the G7 group of leaders did not inform Russia’s representatives that the ‘Golden Age of Capitalism’ was in decline and would not survive beyond the first fifty-years of the twenty-first century.

Vladimir Putin believes that by not providing information about the expected collapse of the ‘Golden Age of Capitalism,’ the representatives of the G7 group misrepresented their case to the United Soviet Socialist Republic; consequently, Vladimir Putin believes the fifteen former states of the United Soviet Socialist Republic were stolen. He intends to retrieve them.

The G7, the European Common Market, and NATO say they are doing everything they can to contain the war between Ukraine and Russia while supporting Ukraine, yet Ukraine has never had a level battlefield upon which to fight because the aircraft, heavy equipment, and ammunition are either not available, or they arrive late to battle. Once the G7, the United States President, the European Common Market, and NATO finish presenting their case as peace-makers, they will wage a war to manage the world's over-population problem.

The Slaughter of the Palestinians

Anyone who has studied Israel's occupation of Palestine understands what is happening today in Gaza. Between 1947, and 1948, more than 700.000 Palestinians were either forcibly removed from their homes, or fled in fear for their lives as Israeli settlers established the state of Israel. Animals when caged and abused for decades will, if given opportunity, lash out at cruel masters. And on October 7, 2023, Hamas struck a terrible blow against Israel, killing 1129 citizens. The Israeli government had known for more than a year that Hamas was training for an attack. Their intelligence services, and constant drone surveillance would have given them that knowledge. The aforementioned information prompts the following question: Why was Israel so exposed to danger on October 7, 2023 ?

The slaughter in Gaza has killed more than 100.000 Palestinians; seventy-five percent of them — woman and children. Killing woman and children is the most effective way to control a population's future development. Is the slaughter in Gaza a blueprint of destruction for the larger war that is soon to come ? Israel will never negotiate in good faith. Their presentation of case is classic, highly manipulative, lacking truth, fact, merit, or law.

The United States Election

The United States may be heading towards a civil war. President Trump, cannot speak without making unsubstantiated claims, speaking half truths, or saying outright lies. He is a master of chaos who would like to rule a white, straight, United States. He intends to replace the United States Democracy with a Russian style Oligarchy. He is dangerous, and will cause great trauma for America, and the world. President Trump says that he wants to be known as a peacemaker, yet his support for Vladimir Putin and Russia, and his attack against Ukraine's President Zelenskyy does not support his stated position. Furthermore, his posture towards Iran suggests that he will create a circumstance to cause the next world war.

His tariffs against Canada and Mexico, suggest that he intends to transfer the entire automobile industry back to the United States. The Supreme Court has already granted him immunity from prosecution for many of the decisions he is going to make.

The campaign by White House staff to deliberately obfuscate the fragility of President Biden's presidency caused democrats the election. Following President Biden's lack lustre performance during the infamous debate the democrats were thrown into a state of panic which encouraged people to vote for Trump. Further, the Justice department took two years to charge him for the January 6, 2021, fiasco, and then allowed him far too much freedom to delay his presentation of case. The entire court action was nothing more than a kabuki play at its finest—pathetic. Any other person would have been in jail long ago. I am wondering, how much support does President Trump have among the Democrats ? They are not an opposition.

President Trump wants to achieve more control over the population as he, and the Oligarchs manage the collapse of the United States economy. If the population of the United States does not protest what their President is doing, they will lose their democracy.

Conclusion

The leadership of the G7 has been lying to the world for fifty-four years while leading the world towards another culling of the population. The United States is becoming an isolationist country because the baby boomer workforce has left the consumer driven marketplace at the rate of 10,000 a day for the last fifteen years and will continue to do so for another four years. They leave behind a smaller workforce supporting a larger dependent population; furthermore, the government has already overspent retirement benefits on promises they could ill afford; consequently, the government cannot collect enough taxes, to supply enough services to the population. The changing demographic will cause baby boomer retirement programs to fail. When they do, the economies that have supported them will also fail.

The world would be better off with a political system like that found in Norway. The Norwegian, government serves people in the marketplace, particularly in areas of Education, healthcare, and transportation, and they do it in a political system where no one political party can achieve control over the Government Pension Fund Global. Yes, the people of Norway pay a lot of taxes, but in Norway taxes buy services which is how democracy is supposed to function.

The 1982 'Valentine's Day After Dinner Conversation' took place forty-four years ago. Today, much of the world's wealth has been transferred from the middle class to the one percent and their new markets overseas. Meanwhile, the leadership of the G7 continues towards another World War that could kill up to two-thirds of the planet's population. Iran is the continuation of what began fifty-four years ago. The G7 group of governments intend to shrink the worlds population to regain control of their economies.
